Research Staff Hearing Statement (2007)

5466 ARTHUR KILL ROAD HOUSE
BOROUGH OF STATEN ISLAND

Built c. 1852 for Reuben and Mary Wood this unusual house combines a once-common popular mid-nineteenth century rural house type, the symmetrically planned center hall house with a side gabled roof fronted by a cross gable, with a transitional style featuring an unusual amalgamation of Greek Revival, Gothic and Italianate styles. The clapboard covered house has all of its historic details including window lintels and sills as well as shutters, brick chimney and door surrounds. The window and doors surrounds are in the Greek Revival style, with Gothic Revival style vergeboards at the eaves and Italianate style porch brackets. The 1855 and 1860 census lists Reuben Wood as an oysterman, an important Tottenville profession. Wood and his family lived in the house until 1864. The 5466 Arthur Kill Road House is a rare survivor of early Tottenville, an important 19th-century town on Staten Island's South Shore.
